THE DEMOCRATIC PRIMARY RACE

December 5-9, 2007

Sen. Hillary Clinton continues to lead in the race for the national preference but the gap between Clinton and Sen. Barack Obama has narrowed over the past two months. Obama benefits from a significant number of Democrats who are looking for a candidate with fresh ideas. But by a wide margin, Clinton is viewed as the most electable candidate in a general election.

Clinton leads Obama by 17 points in this poll, down from 28 points in October, when Clinton held her largest lead. The current standings are similar to September. Today, 44% of Democratic primary voters (registered voters who say they will vote in a Democratic primary or caucus) choose Clinton as the nominee, 27% support Obama. 11% back Edwards, and the other Democratic contenders register in single digits.

DEMOCRATIC CHOICE FOR THE NOMINATION

(Among Democratic primary voters)

	Now	10/07	9/07	8/07
Clinton	44%	51%	44%	45%
Obama	27	23	26	25
Edwards	11	13	17	14

The change is not due to any one demographic group of voters. Clinton has lost some support across the board, and Obama has made gains. Clinton continues to lead Obama among both men and women.

Clinton retains stronger support. 58% of her supporters say they strongly favor her. That compares with 48% of Obama supporters who favor him strongly.

STRENGTH OF SUPPORT

(Among Democratic primary voters)

	Clinton Supporters	Obama Supporters
Strongly favor	58%	48%
Like with reservations	37	42
Dislike other candidates	4	5

More than half of each candidate's supporters say their minds (and their preference) could still change.

IS YOUR MIND MADE UP?

(Among Democratic primary voters)

		Clinton	Obama
	All	Supporters	Supporters
Yes	40%	44%	43%
No	59	56	57

Still, Hillary Clinton is the Democratic candidate seen as having the best chance of winning the presidency in 2008. Both Obama and Edwards are far behind on this measure. Even four in 10 of those Democratic voters not backing Clinton say she has the best chance of defeating the Republican candidate next November.

Edwards	10

How Voters See The Candidates

Clinton and Obama appeal to voters for different reasons. Clinton backers cite her association with Bill Clinton (26%) and having the right experience (23%) as the top reasons for supporting her. Obama's voters back him because he is someone new (27%) - far and away the top answer. In addition, 14% say they are supporting Obama because he will bring change.

WHY DO YOU SUPPORT YOUR CANDIDATE?

(Among Democratic Primary Voters)

Clinton		Obama
Bill Clinton	26%	New person/fresh face	27%
Right experience	23	Will bring change	14
She's a woman	9	Agree on issues	10
She's smart	8	Honesty/integrity	9

Much of the Democratic campaign and its media coverage has focused on the theme experience vs. change and when Democratic primary voters are asked directly, they remain divided over which they prefer.

WHICH IS MORE IMPORTANT IN A CANDIDATE?

(Among Democratic Primary Voters)

	Now	8/07
Right experience	42%	40%
Fresh ideas	45	44

This preference, however, has an impact on vote choice. Primary voters who want fresh ideas are backing Obama, while Clinton captures the overwhelming support of those who say they value the right experience.

WHICH IS MORE IMPORTANT IN A CANDIDATE?

(Among Democratic primary voters)

	Fresh Ideas	Right Experience
Clinton	33%	59%
Obama	43	11

Clearly, Clinton is viewed by Democrats as someone prepared to be president; eight in 10 say she is. On the other hand, just 41% say Obama has prepared himself well for the job of president.

All three major Democratic candidates are viewed as people who would unite the country rather than divide it, but surprisingly Clinton is viewed by more voters as a uniter than Obama is. Few voters see either of them as being on the attack.

CANDIDATE QUALITIES

Will bring Americans together	65%	54%	56%
Will divide them	23	36	21
Is mostly explaining positions	69%	60%	45%
Is mostly attacking opponents	17	25	29

Overall, the top three Democratic candidates get positive assessments from Democratic primary voters nationwide. Clinton garners the most positive ratings, and she is also the best known.

Judging The Issues

34% of Democratic primary voters volunteer the war in Iraq as the most important problem facing the country - it's their top concern - and these voters are backing Clinton over Obama by 42% to 32%. Clinton has a wider lead among Democrats who cite the economy and jobs as the most important problem.

MOST IMPORTANT PROBLEM

(Among Democratic Primary Voters)

War in Iraq	34%
Economy/jobs	11
Health care	9

For the more than six in 10 Democratic primary voters who want U.S. troops out of Iraq in less than a year, 46% are supporting Clinton, while 27% are for Obama.

Immigration, a top issue for Republican primary voters, is mentioned by few Democratic voters as their top concern.

BRINGING IN THE HEAVIES: BILL AND OPRAH

Talk show host Oprah Winfrey hit the campaign trail for Barack Obama in both Iowa and South Carolina this weekend, while former President Bill Clinton campaigned on behalf of his wife in South Carolina on Saturday and will be in Iowa on Monday.

For now, Hillary Clinton may be winning the celebrity endorsement battle. More than four in 10 Democratic primary voters say Bill Clinton's involvement in his wife's campaign makes them more likely to support her. Just as many say his involvement makes no difference.

BILL CLINTON'S INVOLVEMENT IN HILLARY'S CAMPAIGN

(Among Democratic Primary Voters)

But even while Oprah campaigns in the key early states, few voters nationwide say they are being swayed her. 80% say her involvement in his campaign doesn't make a difference. Just 1% say her support will make them more likely to vote for Obama.

The race for the Democratic nomination is a historic one in that the major contenders include a woman candidate and an African American, and majorities of Democratic primary voters say most people they know would vote for a woman and a black candidate.

THE 2008 CAMPAIGN

The Iowa caucuses are less than a month away, and three in four voters nationwide are paying at least some attention to the presidential campaign. Many are enthusiastic about voting. In fact, more voters are paying attention now than at this point than in any campaign since CBS News began asking this question in late 1987.

(Among registered voters)

	Now	12/2003
A lot	33%	21%
Some	43	40
Not much	19	29

Democrats are more excited about this election: Among primary voters, 45% of Democrats are more enthusiastic about voting this year, compared to only 29% of Republicans.

(Among registered voters)

	All	Dem. Primary Voters	Rep. Primary Voters
More	35%	45%	29%
Less	22	13	24

Voters' enthusiasm may stem from their dissatisfaction with the federal government. Just over half of voters are dissatisfied with how the federal government is working and another 17% are angry about it. Even though Democratic primary voters express more discontent with the federal government than Republican primary voters do, half of Republican primary voters are dissatisfied or angry with the federal government.

Looking ahead to the general election in November of 2008, the Democrats still have a broad advantage: 48% of registered voters say they will vote for the Democratic candidate and 31% say they will vote for the Republican candidate.

This poll was conducted among a random sample of 1133 adults nationwide, interviewed by telephone December 5-9, 2007, including 417 Democratic primary voters. The error due to sampling for results based on the entire sample could be plus or minus three percentage points. The error for the sample of Democratic primary voters could be plus or minus five percentage points.
