CAMPAIGN '08
July 31 - August 5, 2008

Presumptive Democratic nominee Barack Obama's foreign trip has not affected voters' belief that Republican John McCain is more likely to be an effective Commander-in-Chief, but voters are more concerned about domestic issues -- especially the economy -- than foreign issues right now.

Obama's lead over McCain remains what it was last month. And while the Arizona Senator now has the edge on being a straight-talker, the Democrat's supporters continue to be much more enthusiastic than McCain's.

THE HORSE RACE

Barack Obama leads John McCain by 45% to 39% in the latest CBS News Poll. Just as many voters now as then - 13% - remain undecided.

IF THE ELECTION WERE TODAY, WOULD YOU VOTE FOR...?

(Among registered voters)

Table with 4 columns: Candidate, Now, 7/2008, 6/2008. Rows: Obama (45%, 45%, 48%), McCain (39, 39, 42), Undecided (13, 12, 6), Won't vote (2, 2, 3)

Voters' attention to the campaign is about as high today as it was in October 2004, less than a month before that election. But things are much more fluid now. 13% of voters today remain undecided; and even though most voters who support each candidate say their minds are made up, 27% of Obama voters and 31% McCain voters say they could still change their minds.

IS YOUR MIND MADE UP?

(Among registered voters with a choice)

Table with 4 columns: Response, All, Obama Voters, McCain Voters. Rows: Mind made up (70%, 72%, 69%), Too early to say (29, 27, 31)

Taken together, a large number of voters, 39%, can be classified as "uncommitted" - they either have a candidate preference that could still change, or they are entirely undecided about whom to choose.

The enthusiasm gap remains: Obama's supporters are three times as likely as McCain's to be enthusiastic about their candidate.

INSIDE THE HORSE RACE

Obama leads McCain among Democrats, liberals, African Americans, voters under age 45 and women. Obama has a small lead with men. Still, nearly twice as many women are undecided than men.

Most Clinton supporters from the primaries are backing Obama, but about a quarter of them are undecided - a higher percentage than most voting groups.

Working class whites (white voters with incomes less than $50K and without a college degree) are now backing Obama - a reversal from last month. George W. Bush won this group in both 2004 and 2000.

However, when income and education are isolated the results are a bit different. Whites with incomes under $50K (regardless of education) back Obama, while whites without a college degree (regardless of income) give the edge to McCain.

McCain leads among Republicans, conservatives, white evangelicals and voters age 45 and over. He has a narrow lead with whites (white men and white women).

Independents are divided. In the 2004 election Independents split: 49% for John Kerry and 48% for Bush.

More than half of voters - 53% - are paying a lot of attention to the campaign now, higher than the 48% who were doing so in August 2004. It wasn't until early October of 2004 that such a large percentage of voters were paying a lot of attention to the campaign (56%). Just under six in 10 Democrats and Republicans are paying close attention, but only four in 10 independents are doing so.

ISSUES IN THE ELECTION

The economy and jobs is by far the issue that voters want to hear the candidates discuss, volunteered by 36%. About half as many - 17% - want to hear more about Iraq, followed by gas prices and health care.

But whatever the issue, most voters don't think the candidates are paying enough attention to it. Seven in 10 voters say the candidates are not addressing the issue that matters to them enough.

Not enough	70

Just 24% of voters who chose the economy as their top issue say the candidates are talking about it enough.

Amid concern about gas prices, 64% of voters support increased drilling off the U.S. coast - a position recently advocated by McCain. Obama has said he is willing to consider limited drilling if it is tied to broader changes in energy policy. In this poll, Republicans (85%) are more likely than Democrats to back the idea (49%).

The Economy

Few voters are "very" confident that either Obama or McCain will make the right decisions on voters' biggest concern, the economy, but about half are at least somewhat confident in both Obama and McCain on this issue. However, nearly as many are not.

Americans' assessment of the economy remains grim. Now 83% of Americans think the condition of the economy is at least somewhat bad. And the number who describes the economy as very bad has increased to 43% from 35% last month.

Iraq

John McCain has an edge on handling the war in Iraq, which is second on the list of issues voters want to hear about from the candidates. The number who are "very confident" that McCain will make the right decisions on Iraq has increased 6 points since March, while there has been little change in perceptions of Obama on this measure, despite his recent trip there.

McCain is being helped by the public's positive assessments of the troop surge. Nearly half of the public now says the troop surge is making things better - a new high. 32% think it is having no impact. In June 2007 - shortly after the troop increase began - only 17% of Americans thought the additional troops were making things better.

Voters who view the surge positively give McCain the advantage on Iraq over Obama by a significant margin.

CANDIDATE QUALITIES

Obama's trip overseas has not done much to bolster his image as a potential Commander-in-Chief; McCain still holds a significant advantage on this characteristic. In fact, both candidates scored lower on this measure than they did last month.

McCain also now has the edge on believability. 49% of voters say he mostly says what he believes, compared to 42% who say that about Obama. Obama has dropped 11 points in perceptions that he says what he believes since May.

And there is little support for reaching out. 22% of Americans think the U.S. should do more to help countries in Africa - which is home to some of the poorest nations in the world - but another 23% think the U.S. should do less. Nearly half - 44% - think the amount of help is about right.

Nearly half of Americans think U.S. support for Israel is about right. Still, some are wary; 30% think the U.S. supports Israel too much. Only 12% thinks the U.S. supports Israel too little. Americans are slightly more skeptical of U.S. support for Israel than they were two years ago. Democrats are more likely than Republicans to think U.S. support for Israel is too much. Although most Americans want President Bush to represent the United States at the Summer Games, only 25% approve of how he is handling his job - equaling his all-time low reached in June.

This poll was conducted among a random sample of 1,034 adults nationwide, including 906 registered voters, interviewed by telephone July 31-August 5, 2008. Phone numbers were dialed from RDD samples of both standard land-lines and cell phones. The error due to sampling for results based on the entire sample and for registered voters could be plus or minus three percentage points. The error for subgroups is higher.
